I started scuba diving at the age of 12 on a family holiday in Greece, my interest in the sport slowly grew until I started University here in the UK. It was then that I joined a BSAC club and started discovering UK diving. Soon after this I began my divemaster qualification and discovered my love for teaching scuba diving!

After University I worked for a couple of years as a manufacturing engineer, but it was also at this time that I enrolled on an open water scuba instructor course. A little while after I became an instructor I decided that it was way more fun than engineering, so I took a job back in Greece as a scuba instructor! I had the opportunity to dive in some fantastic conditions, teach wonderful people from all around the world and discover some awesome marine life.

Now back in the UK, I've joined the fantastic team here at ROHO as the dive school leader! If I'm not in the water with you, then you'll find me in the office organising your next dive trip or even in the shop helping you chose your next bit of kit!

My advice for you as a new diver is to get in the water! It doesn't matter if its Scotland or Egypt, there is always somewhere to go diving. Get your fins wet and build up as much experience as you can.
